Salsa house plan is one of the projects from the series of houses derived from the "Party" project (Party, Party 2, Rumba, Biba, Fokstrot, Samba, Tango). Salsa is a single-family house designed for a family of four and six. A one-storey house with an attic, with a simple block covered with a gable roof, with a part of the garage protruding slightly out of the main lump. The project is intended for a narrow plot that does not allow the construction of a building with a wide front elevation. The minimum width of the plot is 16.9 meters, but changing one of the side facades of the window into a bay we can set up a house on a plot of less than 16 meters (even on a 14.6-meter plot - if you agree to approach the wall without windows 1.5 m from the border). A simple, calm shape of the house combined with a modern form and materials used gives an attractive silhouette of "Salsa". The front of the house is decorated with a large entrance gate, with representative doors. From the garden side we have a partly covered terrace, a beautiful glazed opening of the living space to the garden, and a terrace - balcony of the attic. Modern subdued colours of the house will allow "Salsa" to properly blend in to any neighbourhood. The interior of the house was designed by placing a garage next to the entrance, from the front. From the entrance hall we pass wide glass doors to the hall. The lobby has a very handy bay with a large wardrobe at the vestibule. From the lobby we have a beautiful view of the living room with a void over part of its surface and above the stairs that are the decoration of the interior. Next to it, we have a very practical "wagon" kitchen and a spacious dining room. The living room and dining room are connected by a glass door with a terrace and garden. From the hall you can get to an additional room (e.g. a study room), and toilet. In the attic we have a beautiful hallway, visible from the living room downstairs. The mezzanine is a bridge connecting the parents' apartment (with a bedroom, a very nice wardrobe, a bathroom and a balcony-garden terrace), with attic part for two children's bedrooms, a bathroom and a laundry room. Children's bedrooms also have an exit to the second balcony-terrace. The house has a simple shape, modern architecture, beautiful interior with emptiness above the living room - and above all, it is an excellent design for a narrow plot. For this the house has a simple structure - it will be inexpensive to build and maintain. Narrow plot does not have to be a disadvantage - just decide on the right project - of course, Salsa is the best.
